THE BAG OF WINDS

It was not an easy return home for Ulysses after the Trojan War.

Ulixēs et nautae iter ad patriam Ithacam faciēbant. Multōs annōs nāvīgābant et ad īnsulam Aeolī pervēnērunt. Aeolus erat rēx ventōrum. Ulixēs et nautae multōs diēs manēbant. Deinde Ulixēs rēgī ventōrum dīxit, “Cupiō nāvīgāre ad īnsulam Ithacam.” Aeolus respondit, “Tibi dōnum dabō. Est saccus ventōrum. Habet omnēs ventōs praeter Zephyrum. Zephyrus nāvem ad īnsulam portābit.”

Nautae rogāverunt, “Quid est in sacco? Estne aurum? Diū labōrāvimus et praemium cupimus.” Ulixēs ipse nāvem gubernāre cōstituit. Per novem diēs noctēsque nāvem gubernāvit. Tandem dēfessus Ulixēs dormīvit. Statim nautae magnum saccum aperuērunt et ventī nāvem pulsābant. Ventī nāvem conversābant, et ad īnsulam regis ventōrum Eurus nāvem retrō portāvit.

A THIEF'S DILEMMA
A trap is set to catch a thief.

Ōlim in rēgiā splendidā rēx dīvitissimus vīvēbat. Senex ad hunc rēgem vēnit et dīxit, "Pōne in rēgiā tuā crātēram bitūmine calidō replētam. Sī lātrōnēs venient, nūllum dolum exspectābunt et in crātēram cadent."

Illā nocte duo lātrōnēs, pater et filius, ad urbem rēgis vēnērunt. Nūllō dolō suspectō, pater rēgiam intrāvit. In crātēram usque ad collum cecidit, et statim bitūmine immōbilis tenēbātur! Nec manūs nec pedēs movēre poterat; caput solum tamen līberum mānsit. Gemēns igitur pater infēlīx filium advocāvit. "Servā, mī fili, et tē et fāmam patris tuī! Amputā caput ā corpore meō. Sic nēmō nōmen lātrōnis cognōscet."

Filius perturbātus erat nam manūs suās nece patris cruentāre nōlēbat. Filius etiam cōgitabat, "Capite patris meī vīsō, ā mīlitibus rēgis capiar." Dēnique filius caput patris gladiō amputāvit et miser cum capite fūgit.

ON ESCAPING FROM DIFFICULT SITUATIONS

Catulus outsmarts the Cimbri, a Germanic tribe.

Q. Lutatius Catulus ā Cimbrīs pulsus ūnam spem salūtis habēbat. Spērāvit trānsire flūmen cuius rīpam hostēs tenēbant. Cōstituit in proximō monte cōpiās ostendere tamquam ibi castra positūrus. Atque praecēpit suīs mīlitibus nē sarcinās solverent aut onera dēpōnerent aut ab ordinibus discēderent. Quō magis persuāsiōnem hostium cōfirmāret, in cōspectū pauca tabernācula erigī ignēsque fieri iussit. Iussit quoque aliōs struere vallum, aliōs exire in lignātiōnem, ut cōspicerentur. Cum Cimbrī haec vīdissent, locum castrīs dēlēgērunt et in proximōs agrōs sē dispersērunt ad comparanda ea quae castrīs necessariā erant. Sic Catulō dedērunt occāsiōnem nōn solum trānseundī flūmen, sed etiam Cimbrōrum castra oppugnandī.

Introduction to Latin

The small gladiator kills a big gladiator. Then the announcer announces the small gladiator as the winner. The crowd shouts. Women throw money to the small gladiator because he is a handsome man. The next day the small gladiator exercises himself in the (gladiators') school. Many gladiators run, and jump, and fight. Some gladiators ride horses and fight with swords. A few prepare to fight with bears.

The (gladiatorial) trainer enters with a boy. The boy is the son of the trainer and walks behind the trainer. When the boy sees the horses, he happily runs to the horses. Suddenly the bears frighten the horses. Three horses throw off their riders and run away from the bears toward the boy. The trainer shouts, but the horses do not stop. The small gladiator sees the horses and hurries to the boy. The gladiator snatches up the boy and carries (him) out of the danger. The trainer thanks the gladiator and sets the gladiator free.

Latin I

Ulysses and the sailors journeyed to their native land, Ithaca. They sailed for many years and arrived at the island of Aeolus. Aeolus was the king of the winds. Ulysses and the sailors remained for many days. Then Ulysses said to the king of the winds, "I want to sail to the island Ithaca." Aeolus answered, "I will give you a gift. It is a bag of winds. It holds all the winds except Zephyr. Zephyr will carry the ship to the island."

The sailors asked, "What is in the bag? Is it gold? We have worked for a long time and we want a reward." Ulysses decided to steer the ship himself. For nine days and nights he steered the ship. Finally the tired Ulysses slept. Immediately the sailors opened the big bag and the winds struck the ship. The winds turned the ship around and Eurys carried the ship back to the island of the king of the winds.

Latin II

Once upon a time a very rich king lived in a splendid palace. An old man came to this king and said, "Put a tub filled with hot tar in your palace. If thieves will come, they will expect no trick, and they will fall into the tub."

That night two thieves, a father and son, came to the city of the king. No trick having been suspected, the father entered the palace. He fell into the tub all the way up to his neck, and immediately he was held motionless by the tar! He was able to move neither his hands nor his feet; only his head still remained free. Therefore, groaning, the unhappy father called his son, "My son, save both yourself and the reputation of your father! Cut off my head from my body. Thus no one will know the name of the thief."

The son was very upset, for he did not want to stain with blood his own hands by the murder of his father. The son also thought, "The head of my father having been seen, I will be seized by the soldiers of the king." At last the son cut off his father's head with a sword and unhappily fled with the head.

Latin III – IV Prose

Quintus Lutatius Catulus, repelled by the Cimbri, had one hope for safety. He hoped to cross a river whose bank the enemy was holding. He decided to display his troops on the nearest mountain, as though about to set up camp there. And he commanded his soldiers not to loosen their packs or put down their loads or get out of formation (break ranks). In order that he might strengthen to a greater extent the impression of the enemy, in [their] sight he ordered a few tents to be erected and fires to be made. He also ordered some to build a rampart, others to go out for gathering wood, so that they might be seen. When the Cimbri had seen these things, they chose a place for camp and they dispersed themselves into the nearest fields to gather those things which were necessary for camp. Thus they gave Catulus an opportunity not only for crossing the river, but also for attacking the camp of the Cimbri.

Latin III-IV Poetry

Finally my love is (a) safe (one); there no wars are being prepared nor does the wave (sea) carry avenging ships. If you are wise, do not count on Helen (being) faithful to you (she) who has turned so quickly into your embraces. As Menelaus shouts (about) the vows of a dishonored bed and (he) grieves having been wronged by a foreign love, you also will shout. By no skill is wronged virtue able to be restored, that (virtue) has been lost once and for all. She burns with love for you; she also loved Menelaus in this way; now that gullible one lies in an empty bed.

Latin V-VI

However, the man, shrewdest of all men, saw that on account of the greed of the Cretans he would be in great danger unless he had provided for something; for he was carrying with himself a lot of money, concerning which he knew that a rumor had leaked out. And so he adopts such a plan. He fills several wine jars with lead, (and) he covers the tops of the wine jars with gold and silver. While the chiefs are present, he, pretending that he is entrusting his fortunes to their protection, places these (wine jars) in the temple of Diana. When these (chiefs) have been led into the deception, he fills bronze statues, which he was carrying with him, with all his money, and he tosses them aside in the storage room in his home. The Cretans guard the temple with great care, not so much from others as from Hannibal, lest that one, while they are unaware, remove (the wine jars) and take (them) with him. Thus, after his possessions had been saved, the Carthaginian, when all the Cretans had been tricked, came to Prusias on the Black Sea.

Cadmus, a fugitive from his fatherland, avoids the wrath of his parent, and as a suppliant, consults the oracle of Apollo, and asks what land must be inhabited. Phoebus says, "A cow, having endured no yoke and free from the curved plow, will meet you in lonely fields. With her as guide, take up the road and, in what grassy (field) she lies down to rest, make sure to establish your walls, and call them Boeotia."

Hardly had Cadmus successfully made his descent from the Castalian cave, (when) he sees a cow unguarded, going along slowly, wearing no sign of servitude on her neck. He follows and chooses (presses his) footsteps in the track (already) pressed; and he silently worships Phoebus, the author of the way. The cow halted, and lifting her forehead, beautiful with lofty horns, to heaven, she struck the upper air with mooing. And so, looking back on the companions following (behind) her back, she lay down, and let her flank sink down in the tender grass.
